Innovation has always been a cornerstone of Gard’s business model and, over the years, we have refined and extended our standard products and introduced a range of additional products, responding to special needs and requirements from different parts of the marine industry.

Gard’s extended loss of hire cover responds to a shipowner’s loss of income caused by delay or detention of a ship that has not been physically damaged.

Case studies

Detention of ship caused by death or illness of a port stevedore

The ship is held for a prolonged period by the authorities following a fatal or serious injury to a pilot or stevedore. This detention could be due to a real or alleged need for the authorities to complete their accident investigation. Gard has also seen examples where the ship is detained until financial security for future claim payments has been arranged.

Delay of ship caused by blocking on arrival in loading port

Prior to a ship’s arrival at a loading port in South America, another vessel becomes grounded. The grounded ship blocks a channel to the port basin, leaving no room for other iron ore carriers to safely navigate and berth. A significant salvage (and subsequent wreck removal) operation is conducted, but it takes three months to clear the channel. The ship is delayed for 35 days while seeking an alternative loading port.

Detention caused by pirate attack

A ship is captured by pirates as she approaches her Nigerian discharge port with a cargo of bagged sugar. She is diverted by the hijackers into a secluded part of the Niger Delta. The ship resurfaces two months later with a different name and a repainted funnel. With the help of high-level diplomacy and negotiators provided by the IMB Piracy Centre, the owners manage to get their ship back. However, much of the cargo has been lost and the ordeal has cost the owners four months of lost charter hire as the London arbitrators disagree about whether the nominated discharge port was unsafe.

Delay caused by intervention from the authorities following the rescue of persons at sea

Instead of receiving praise from the local authorities for rescuing refugees lost at sea in South East Asia, the ship is boarded by militant forces. The vessel is held for five weeks off the coast while the fate of the illegal immigrants is decided with the help of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees.
